I have several times injured crops where they can see the other birds, when hen manure has been put in the hill or drill. It will even destroy potatoes if applied freely in the hill. It is rich in ammonia, which is poison to vegetables or animal life if not greatly diluted.

I find the safest as well as the most economical method is to spread it broadcast, and cultivate it into the soil with a cultivator running from three to five inches deep. Nor is there danger of cultivating the ground too much. The more thoroughly the manure is mingled with the soil the better, and if the work is done at intervals of a few days it will be better still, as the hard lumps, if any there be, will have time to soften so they will to come to the surface. Smoking Out Lice With Tobacco

I want to tell you how my wife and I got rid of the large lice off our chicks. We used three borrowed hens for sitters, and they were very lousy-and so, of course, were the little chicks. We took them away from the hens, and as we were looking one over I was smoking, and my wife asked me to blow some tobacco smoke on the chick. I did so, and the lice began Unless one realizes the strength tobacco in the smoker, dropped on more surface than the same bulk of they were smoked we put them in most other kinds of farm manure. the brooder yard, first spreading As it is especially rich in nitrogen, paper on the bottom of the yard. it would pay well to spread it in Well, the lice began to come out connection with poorer manure if and drop on the paper, and the one has it.
